Monday 16th September Printed Semiconductors and the future of Electronics Dr Sebastian Wood, Senior Research Scientist, National Physical Laboratory, London Science Discovery Group Held on the 3rd Monday of the month, 7.30 - 9.15 at Emsworth Community Centre £3pp on the door For the last 70 years, progress in electronics has been based on inorganic semiconductors, primarily silicon. We've seen amazing developments in consumer electronics, but there are some fundamental limitations to what can be achieved using traditional semiconductors: they are hard, brittle materials, and require expensive processing equipment.
